Zoo(nope)ia

Ghosts are a lot like us. They have families, go to schools, and text their ghost friends on their cell phones. But not everything is so easy for ghosts. Ghosts really love animals and would love to have their own ghost zoo, but they've never been able to make one that could keep the ghost animals in. The animals, like all ghosts, could walk through walls which means they could easily escape their habitats. When the ghost families arrived at the zoo, the ghost children would cry and cry because the ghost animals were all gone. One ghost family had a great idea. They decided to go to the human zoo, where the animals can't escape. This way there would be tons of animals for their ghost children to see.

The ghost family packed into their car and headed out for the zoo, but soon they got lost. The ghost dad had just upgraded to the brand new iPhone, but he hadn't figured out how to work the maps app. He drove around in circles for a while pretending everything was fine. Right when he was ready to give up and admit he was lost, he saw a pet store. "Here's the zoo kids!" He said as he parked the car. The ghost mom rolled her eyes, but went along with it. She didn't want the kids to be sad.

The "zoo" had cats, which the ghost daughter loved the most. She stood looking at the cats for a long time, and imagined how soft they were. The cats looked back at the ghost daughter and meowed.

The "zoo" also had mice, which the ghost son liked a lot. He watched the mice run on their wheels and drink from their water bottles. He thought it would be fun to hold the mice and let the climb on his arm.

After a while, the ghost kids asked their dad where the elephants and tigers and monkeys were. He told them this was an extra special zoo that only had small animals. The ghost kids had never heard of a special zoo with only small animals, so they felt really lucky to have found such a unique place.

Next the ghost family stopped at the "gift shop". It sold awesome gifts like flea spray and nail trimmers. The kids were sure what they were supposed to do with these strange things, but they went ahead and begged their ghost parents to buy them some anyway. Not wanting to raise any suspicions, the ghost dad let them each pick one "souvenir". The ghost daughter picked out some catnip, and the ghost son got plastic mouse ball.

The ghost kids told their parents they wanted to go to the snack bar next. The ghost kids picked a snack called "milk bones". The kids thought it was an odd name for a snack, but the live crickets didn't look appetizing at all! They found the milk bones to be very hard and crunchy. They had to chew them a long time, but eventually they managed to swallow their snack.

As the ghost families packed into their car to head home, the kids had a lot to say about their day. The ghost daughter talked about how cute the cats were, and the ghost son talked about how much he'd love to have a mouse of his own. The ghost kids showed each other their interesting "souvenirs". The ghost mom was glad the kids were happy, and the ghost dad was relieved his plan had worked. It so much fun he considered going back, even though it wasn't a real zoo. Only next time they'd pack their own snacks because the "snack" they had there were way too crunchy!
